

NEPAL BIRD WATCHING TOUR

It is an ornithologist's dream: cascading clouds shadowing lofty peaks and distant valleys; lush forests and tranquil rice fields bursting with fragrances and some of the most magnificent birds this side of the Himalayas. Nepal is a land of extremes, and its wildlife is no exception. The combination of truly unparalleled landscapes and brilliant creatures makes it an irresistible destination for nature watchers, especially those who love to watch the feathered friends of the skies take flight.

Kings of the Skies

Birds have long been revered in Nepali culture, and it is easy to see why – from majestic eagles to mysterious nightjars, the region is full of rare and wondrous species. Popular sites for spotting include Koshi Tappu Wildlife Reserve, Chitwan National Park, and the Annapurna region, perfect for catching glimpses of egrets, ibises, storks, herons, Indian peafowl, great barbet, and much more. Many of these areas are protected and offer sighting posts for watchers as well as sites ideal for camping or other accommodation. With hundreds and hundreds of bird species to discover throughout the seasons, Nepal provides an incredible escape for both amateur bird watchers as well as professional observers.

As well as excellent opportunities to spot birds, the Indian Rhino, langur, Sambar and Hog Deer are known to make an appearance. Whether in the great Phulchowki Mountain (Kathmandu Valley's most abundant locale for birds) or the sprawling wetlands, visitors can expect to see a variety of animals and grab some coveted snapshots. Watchers can either make the trek alone or with experienced tour guides, which not only provides additional safety into more challenging terrain, but a refreshing insight into the surrounding region and the societies with thrive within.

If you are drawn to atmosphere of beautiful temples, dramatic mountain ranges and lush valleys – and birds are your passion – then Nepal is a must-see. Journey to the Roof of the World and explore the same skies that these noble beasts of legend have reigned over for thousands of years, and discover just what makes Nepal one of the most unique and precious places on the planet.
